THE UNIVERSITY RACE.

The Annual Contest Won by the Cambridge Crew by a Length and a Half.

LONDON, March 23.—The annual race between the eight-oared crew of the Oxford and Cambridge Clubs, took place today, over the usual course of four miles two furlongs, from Putney to Mortlake, on the Thames, and resulted in favor of the Cambridge men. The day was unfavorable, both for spectators and contestants. A snow-storm prevailed all the morning, and at one time it was reported and generally believed that the race would be postponed. To this report, perhaps, as much as to the inclemency of the weather, was due the fact that the attendance of spectators was very meagre in comparison with the crowds which this contest usually attracts to the banks of the Thames. Nevertheless there were many thousands of people assembled along the course, who maintained their enthusiasm despite the unfavorable surroundings, and cheered lustily as the varying events of the race seemed to change the probabilities of its ends.

At the hour of starting the snow was still falling heavily, and the water of the Thames was rough and "lumpy," but the boats drew into the stream promptly, and were greeted with rounds of cheers from either bank.

The Oxford boat had the lead at the start, but kept it for less than half a mile, the "light blues" coming up and going ahead at Bishop's Creek. The next mile was a steady gain by both crews, Cambridge keeping its slight advantage. Opposite the Soap-works, the "dark blues" spurted and reached the side of Cambridge. For a short distance the boats were head and head, but Cambridge soon slightly increased its stroke, and passed Hammersmith Bridge a length in advance. This advantage was kept until the boats came to what is known as "Corney Reach," where the water was found to be lumpy, and the Oxfords showed rowing and fine steersmanship, gained splendidly upon their rivals. Cambridge was badly steered through the "Reach," past Chiswick Eyot, but directly afterward answered well to the call of GOLDIE, with a spurt of thirty-seven strokes per minute. Thence to the Barnes Railway Bridge the struggle between the contending crews was a series of severe and continuous spurtings, during which Oxford reached as high as forty-two strokes per minute. Cambridge, however, continued to lead, and finished in good style, passing the ship at Mortlake one length and a half ahead, in 21 minutes 34 seconds. Another account fixes the time at 21 minutes 42 seconds.

THE OXFORD CREW.

Mr. LESLEY, President of the Oxford University Boat Club, had great difficulty in making up his crew this year, as there were very few recruits, and none of them first-rate men, as compared with previous years. Of the old crew four were at first reported as available, but one of these, Mr. HOW Alfred MOSS, was unfortunately not able through illness to accept a seat in the crew. So the Old Guard was reduced to three—GIBBS, MALDEN and LESLEY—though the crew was afterward further strengthened by Mr. PAYNE, a high class, who consented to row GILES return in his favor. The crew as formed for the race, according to the latest advices, was as follows:

	Name.	Weight.
1.	BOSSON, Trinity	11 st. 3 lbs.
2.	WARNER, Christ's	11 " 10½ "
3.	MORSHEAD, Trinity	11 " 6½ "
4.	PAYNE, Trinity	12 " 7½ "
5.	BARNES, Trinity	12 " 0 "
6.	GOLDIE, Trinity	11 " 12 "
7.	GIBBS, Pembroke	11 " 11 "
8.	C. E. ROBERTS, Pembroke (steersman)	8 " 7 "

THE CAMBRIDGE CREW.

This crew was on the whole a more advanced than the Oxford crew, in point of training, though there were glaring faults in their style of rowing, as well as inequalities in time and swing. Of the Light Blues, seven, six and four were veterans. Five was a new man, very young to row as one might say, so that he got a good deal of coaching in addition to what is known as "Corney Reach," where the water was found to be lumpy, and the Oxfords showed rowing and fine steersmanship, gained splendidly upon their rivals. The style of rowing of this crew was uniform, cleaner in finish than last year, the beginning of the stroke was well defined, and the swing long and lively. The principal fault was a tendency to hang before getting into the water, and inaccuracy in feathering the oar. Taking altogether, the crew had more style, more swing and time, less lumber, and not quite so much "grip" force, on the crew of last year, and were considered far superior to their antagonists.

FRANCE.

Foreign Ministers Protest Against the Abrogation of the Commercial Treaties.

PARIS, March 22.—Lord LYONS, the English Ambassador to France, and Señor OLOZAGA, the Spanish Ambassador, have had a lengthy interview with Count DE REMUSAT, Minister of Foreign Affairs, relative to the French commercial policy. It is stated that the two Ministers expressed the deep regret felt by their respective Governments at the errors involved in the 17th Article of the Treaty of Commerce, and the conclusion of the treaties which do not secure most favored nation treatment. Failing which, Spain would be forced to make reprisals.

THE WAR IN CUBA.

Valmaseda's Reasons for Not Capturing Gen. Quesada—Arrival of Arms—Movements of Insurgents—Miscellaneous Matters.

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

HAVANA, Sunday, March 17, 1872.

Gen. VALMASEDA left just one week ago, and will, undoubtedly, try to make his diversion good, that the revolution will be over by the month of MAY. But his evident desire to quell the rebellion and the comparatively insignificant number of insurgents now in arms, will only partially contributed toward this desired end, and it is more than probable that VALMASEDA will not be able to finish the war. In case he is unsuccessful, I am positive, that he will leave for Spain before the 1st of June, allowing his successor to dry his hands on the pie, which RODAS and VALMASEDA have left in the oven. VALMASEDA has done, and is doing a great deal, but even he is deceived by his subordinates, although not to the same extent as RODAS. They write that the revolution is over, and give tremendous accounts of battle on paper, presenting the real aspect of affairs in such a manner as to delight the Captain-General, but when least expected the reported pacified district is as much overrun by insurgent bands as when the rebellion was acknowledged to be strong and active. If the Havana Volunteers, who had offered their services by many times on paper, had only gone to guard the military cordon, and allowed the regulars time to take the field, it is almost certain that the revolution would now be but an insignificant affair; but when VALMASEDA accepted their services their patriotism cooled off, and prudence counseled them to remain quietly at home, to read the papers and to criticise the doings of the regular army and navy.

THE STUDENT QUESTION.

The student question continues to occupy public attention, and is also a bone of contension among the Volunteers. The Fifth, Second, Third and Artillery battalions are in favor of having the boys set free. The Fourth, Fifth, Sixth and Seventh Battalions of Chasseurs are opposed to the measure. The mothers of the students called on Duke ALBERA, and requested him to intercede in favor of the prisoners, and the Duke who, however, had been informed that such an attempt would be made, received them politely, and told them he would attend to it, which he failed to do, except in so far as to mention the matter to VALMASEDA. The latter gave him his stereotyped answer: "I am sorry for the boys, but the matter is in the hands of the Government at Madrid." ALBERA, like a good royalist, of course, did not trouble his head any more about the children of supposed insurgents; and although reports to the contrary have been circulated, your correspondent is aware that the matter was mentioned only once. The boys will not be released by VALMASEDA (because he does not dare to do so) until he can manage to capture some important personage of the revolutionists or gain some battle of consequence.

RECOGNITION OF A MARRIAGE.

Miss AMELIA HAMEL, of New-Orleans, the daughter of J. B. HAMEL, at present a commission merchant of Havana, who was married to Prince LUIS DE BOURBON in New-York in 1869, and whose marriage had not been recognized by the groom's family, has now been recognized by the Count and Countess DE AQUILA, (the parents of the Prince,) and also by FRANCISCO II., Ex-King of Naples, and chief of the family. The Ex-King has also bestowed the title of Count and Countess DE ROCA GUGLIELMA on the young couple. If to this universal recognition a fair income is added, the young folks will have no reason to complain.

NEWS FROM THE REVOLUTIONISTS.

The report that the Cubans in the Eastern Department had gotten up a plan to depose CESPEDES, and proclaim Gen. MAXIMO GOMEZ in his stead, is received from several sources, and, like other statements of the kind, may have an origin. MAXIMO GOMEZ is undoubtedly a very brave and noble soldier, and as it is stated that he would be supported by Gens. INCLAN, GARRIDO and MORENO DIAZ, his party would be that of the fighting men, and therefore the strongest. Nearly all the prominent Cuban chiefs are foreigners, GARRIDO being a Venezuelan, DIAZ and GOMEZ Dominicans, and INCLAN a Mexican. Positive information as to the truth of the report has not been received from trustworthy Cuban sources, and the whole story may only be another edition of one of the usual rows among the leaders.

THE HOWARD CASE.

No case has attracted more attention, and yet been more misunderstood, than the case of Dr. JOHN E. HOWARD, of Chemfuegos. Dr. HOWARD informed your assistant correspondent that a certain official (not a Spanish official) had told him that his case had been neglected at Washington. Those who know the promptness and efficiency of the Secretary of State believe this is untrue, and that the fault must be looked for nearer home. The very natural consequence has been that Dr. HOWARD went to Spain on Friday on the Spanish steamer Antonio Lopez, wearing the garb of a felon and a heavy chain rivetted to his waist and ankle. The Spanish authorities claimed that Dr. HOWARD was not an American but a Spanish citizen, but your correspondent has taken pains to investigate this assertion, as also the one that the doctor's father had been not only a Spanish officer, but also a Commissary of Police; he has found both charges to be false. And here it may be proper to state that in order to obtain accurate information regarding Americans it is always best to call on the English, French or German Consuls, who are always well posted and always ready to afford any information in their power. Dr. HOWARD registered his name on the books of the United States Consulate at the end of 1868 or the beginning of 1869; whether Mr. FOX or Mr. MORRIS furnished the State Department with this information is not known. His police cedula of 1869 positively stated that Mr. HOWARD was a citizen of Philadelphia, and if the cedula of 1870 stated differently it was by an unwarranted act on the part of the Commissary of Police, instigated, as is generally supposed, by JOSE JOAQUIN VERDAGUER, a notary public of Cienfuegos, and a bitter personal enemy of the doctor. This same VERDAGUER swore at the trial that the doctor had been at a place called Lechuza, a small settlement where the Cuban leaders met when the revolution broke out in the Ulach Villas. Eleven witnesses swore to the contrary, and other witnesses was obtained, proving him alibi. Nevertheless the doctor was convicted of the charge. But the assertion that the doctor's father had been a Commissary of police is taken as the reason given that the Government imprisoned him, although the Doctor's father died and there. Refusal to receive the Ambassador, and to grant him an office, was of a piece with the rest of the treatment. Of course no one has any reason to feel sure of anything, but everything points to the fact

PALM SUNDAY.

Some Account of the Origin of the Festival.

Christ's Entry into Jerusalem—The Observances of the Olden Times—Quaint Festivals—Palm Sunday in the Present Day.

Today is Palm Sunday, still a festival in the Christian Church, though the celebration of the present day is but a shadow of those high and imposing ceremonies which, in olden time, delighted the imagination and touched the hearts of the superstitious people. We need to be told that Palm Sunday is intended to commemorate the entry of our Savior into Jerusalem at the time when his fame as a wonder-worker and prophet was at its zenith. In the year 33 of the Christian era, and the last year of his earthly life, for he was soon to be crucified, Christ had been teaching beyond the Jordan, had passed through Jericho, and had sojourned for a time in the pleasant valleys that lie there-abouts, during the Passion Week, and given parable of the vineyard, and heave it about in processions. So is this day called Palme Sonday."

After the era of the Reformation Palm Sunday was retained among the feasts of the English Church, but the procession was forbidden. This was probably on account of the rude mummeries that accompanied it. It had become the practice to draw a wooden figure on a wooden donkey in front of the processon and to sing mongrel verses of English and Latin, which were both profane and obscene. But though the law forbade the procession, it could not forbid the inhabitants from taking a walk in the afternoon and returning laden with branches of the willow, which in England is always in flower at this season. To this day the people of London go out by tens of thousands on Palm Sunday to Wimbledon Common and Wormholt Scrubs, and the pleasant hills of Hampstead and Highgate. They do not know why they do it. Thousands of them belong to no church, and know nothing of Jesus save as a variation of the national oath. Yet they never fail to bring home rods of the salix, laden with bursting silken flower-pods, for this tree flowers before it leaves, and they preserve it religiously during the year, having a vague belief from tradition that the household which contains a palm is safe throughout the year from storms, and especially from lightning.

In other countries the procession has fared no better than in England. In Spain, Indeed, before the fall of Granada, Christians, Jews and Moors alike kept Palm Sunday. The Domingo de Ramos was celebrated with considerable pomp. But even then, though the priests had full sway, public opinion was against processions, even one so innocent as this, and the whole thing was voted an anachronism. So in France, the Dimanche de Rameaux was treated with good humor, and became obsolete. When many of the Puritan preachers, desirous to reanimate the body of Christianity, discussed the question whether it is lawful to remember games of cricket and feats of football, but not suitable to its manhood of today? In Rome, of course, the day was celebrated as in the olden time, but even there with some, though slight, variations. Who made the procession? Jesus better than any preachments. There is but one country, or rather but one religion, that maintains this day in all its splendor. In the Greek Church Palm Sunday has been shorn of none of its old glories. Throughout Greece and throughout Russia, one in her denomination, the other in the observance of forms and ceremonies, Palm Sunday is still celebrated as in the olden time. Why not today, for the Greek Church, uninfluenced by the volatile mind of Pope GREGORY, has refused to accept the new style of calculating the year, and is consequently eleven days behind. Palm Sunday, therefore, in the great Empire of Europe, will not be celebrated until the Sunday after our Easter.

Perhaps there are places in Europe where nothing has been changed, where the processions of Palm Sundays and the decorations of the Houses are as they were before Hugh Launcelot and Lorraine blazed menace against the Papal See. The world is so wide that it is impossible to know all the little portals where medievalism hides securely. It is but a few months since civilization was startled by the "Passion Play" at Ober Ammergau. Perhaps there may be places where, to-day, the people come in processions to the church with branches of willow in their hands, and pin them upon the altar to be blessed by the priest. Perhaps a wooden ass is being dragged and figs are being eaten amid chants whose verses contain words that would thrill the very marrow of a philologist with rapture. But as parents are known to have taught each other, "There stands our King." But his heart sank as he surveyed the city, and he wept, saying, "If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace! But now they are hid from thine eyes." Then he entered into Jerusalem to leave it no more.

Upon our forefathers the effect of this story so taught in that picturesque fashion of the early ecclesiastics was very great. Today in America, there is no symbolic observance to-day current among the members of the Christian Church. But even with them, this "festival in the midst of its most important features (that is an unlucky be called a festival at all. In the Catholic churches today throughout Spain will be distributed fragments of cedar or rosemary which have been placed upon the altar and consecrated by the priest. Every Catholic who visits the church will bring back one of these fragments, and many will faithfully preserve them. This custom is a very pleasant one despite the antipathies of the Protestant Church against such word signs in religion. The little bit of green, so delicate in the tenacity of leaf, so perfect of spray portions, carefully carried to the midst of the thoughtful preacher, that on that first Palm Sunday when the olive-bound gentiles on the hill-sides of Jerusalem were despoiled of their branches to form a carpet for the person of Him who afterward died to save their souls.

But in the days of old there was but only a procession to the church, in which every person brought his branch of palm, or rose, or bore it in his hand, but in the houses of the wealthy there was a solemn decoration with the same materials. Brown, in his History of Old England, says that branches of either kind of a twisted tree were brought to the King with great ceremonials. In the oldest book in England, the survey of landed estates held under feudal tenure, compiled by order of WILLIAM the Conqueror, and known as Domesday Book, a tenant in Shropshire is recorded as holding a large estate on condition of providing the lord of the manor with a basket of rose on Palm Sunday, Sarum hunt in die palmarum. This shows that box was sometimes used in place of olive-branches, which it would be hard to find in England. The willow mentioned by Brown is, of course, the willow, and the twisted tree to be hazel to be the ivy. So that it seems that the word palm is not meant to designate any particular branch, but only a leafy sign of victory, as a spiritual acknowledgment of Christ's victory over the powers of evil, and also of his kingly gathering over the souls of men. In the earliest printed book extant in England, CAXTON'S Directions for Keeping Feasts, which appeared in the reign of EDWARD IV., about the year 1487, the festival of Palm Sunday is thus described:

"Wherefor holi churche this daye maketh solempne processyon in mynde of the processyon that Cryst made this day; but for encheson, (this word is believed to mean occasion,) that we have noone olyve trees that bereth grene leves we take palme braunches, palme and grete braunche of olyve, and bere it about in processyon. So is thys day called Palme Sonday."

In the days of Elizabeth Palm Sunday was retained among the feasts of the English Church, but the procession was forbidden. This was probably on account of the rude mummeries that accompanied it. It had become the practice to draw a wooden figure on a wooden donkey in front of the processon and to sing mongrel verses of English and Latin, which were both profane and obscene. But though the law forbade the procession, it could not forbid the inhabitants from taking a walk in the afternoon and returning laden with branches of the willow, which in England is always in flower at this season. To this day the people of London go out by tens of thousands on Palm Sunday to Wimbledon Common and Wormholt Scrubs, and the pleasant hills of Hampstead and Highgate. They do not know why they do it. Thousands of them belong to no church, and know nothing of Jesus save as a variation of the national oath. Yet they never fail to bring home rods of the salix, laden with bursting silken flower-pods, for this tree flowers before it leaves, and they preserve it religiously during the year, having a vague belief from tradition that the household which contains a palm is safe throughout the year from storms, and especially from lightning.

In other countries the procession has fared no better than in England. In Spain, Indeed, before the fall of Granada, Christians, Jews and Moors alike kept Palm Sunday. The Domingo de Ramos was celebrated with considerable pomp. But even then, though the priests had full sway, public opinion was against processions, even one so innocent as this, and the whole thing was voted an anachronism. So in France, the Dimanche de Rameaux was treated with good humor, and became obsolete. When many of the Puritan preachers, desirous to reanimate the body of Christianity, discussed the question whether it is lawful to remember games of cricket and feats of football, but not suitable to its manhood of today? In Rome, of course, the day was celebrated as in the olden time, but even there with some, though slight, variations. Who made the procession? Jesus better than any preachments. There is but one country, or rather but one religion, that maintains this day in all its splendor. In the Greek Church Palm Sunday has been shorn of none of its old glories. Throughout Greece and throughout Russia, one in her denomination, the other in the observance of forms and ceremonies, Palm Sunday is still celebrated as in the olden time. Why not today, for the Greek Church, uninfluenced by the volatile mind of Pope GREGORY, has refused to accept the new style of calculating the year, and is consequently eleven days behind. Palm Sunday, therefore, in the great Empire of Europe, will not be celebrated until the Sunday after our Easter.

Perhaps there are places in Europe where nothing has been changed, where the processions of Palm Sundays and the decorations of the Houses are as they were before Hugh Launcelot and Lorraine blazed menace against the Papal See. The world is so wide that it is impossible to know all the little portals where medievalism hides securely. It is but a few months since civilization was startled by the "Passion Play" at Ober Ammergau. Perhaps there may be places where, today, the people come in processions to the church with branches of willow in their hands, and pin them upon the altar to be blessed by the priest. Perhaps a wooden ass is being dragged and figs are being eaten amid chants whose verses contain words that would thrill the very marrow of a philologist with rapture. But as parents are known to have taught each other, "There stands our King." But his heart sank as he surveyed the city, and he wept, saying, "If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace! But now they are hid from thine eyes." Then he entered into Jerusalem to leave it no more.

Upon our forefathers the effect of this story so taught in that picturesque fashion of the early ecclesiastics was very great. Today in America, there is no symbolic observance to-day current among the members of the Christian Church. But even with them, this "festival in the midst of its most important features (that is an unlucky be called a festival at all. In the Catholic churches today throughout Spain will be distributed fragments of cedar or rosemary which have been placed upon the altar and consecrated by the priest. Every Catholic who visits the church will bring back one of these fragments, and many will faithfully preserve them. This custom is a very pleasant one despite the antipathies of the Protestant Church against such word signs in religion. The little bit of green, so delicate in the tenacity of leaf, so perfect of spray portions, carefully carried to the midst of the thoughtful preacher, that on that first Palm Sunday when the olive-bound gentiles on the hill-sides of Jerusalem were despoiled of their branches to form a carpet for the

MILITARY GOSSIP.

General Notes Concerning the Seventh—News from Other Cities.

Already several of the regiments in this city are looking forward to active movements next Summer. The Seventh first will no doubt make an excursion, though as what direction is not yet decided upon. A battalion of the Twenty-second has been invited to visit Richmond, Va., and the invitation has been so strongly and courteously presented that it may result in the entire regiment going up the James River. The members of the Twenty-second are, however, strongly in favor of an encampment of ten days, and it is to be hoped that the project will be carried into effect, as the exercises permissible in camp cannot fail to improve the discipline of the regiment, and also add to the health of those participating. The expense, in time and money, may defeat the movement, and an excursion be adopted as an outlet for the activity of the very active organization. If there are other cities besides Richmond desirous of seeing the Twenty-second, they must enter the field at once. The Seventh remained quiet last Summer, so it is very probable that the members will seek to enjoy themselves as a regiment during the coming Summer. An encampment may be the result, though we doubt it, as the idea fell flat last season. If the Seventh goes on an excursion, the boys will probably select a steam-boat trip, and eschew large cities and hot parades or marches, the Philadelphia experience being still fresh in the minds of many unfortunates. The Eighth, Sixth and Ninth also talk of excursions, though no definite move has yet been taken in either organization.

The fourth annual reunion of Sedgwick Post, G. A. R., will be held on morrow evening, at the New-York Assembly Rooms, in Second-avenue. As the committee have spared no pains in their preparations the occasion will no doubt be a pleasant one.

It is understood that the Adjutant-General of this State has decided in the case of the application of Capt. Johnson's company of colored men, at Astoria, that no new company can be enrolled in the National Guard until it falls below 30, the minimum number allowed by law. Col. Hawkins says that the application of fifty gallons of colored men in this City, called on the Adjutant-General recently, to endeavor to have his men enrolled, but was met by the same reply as that given in the case of the Astoria company. Col. Hawkins and Capt. Johnson hope to effect a change in the law next January, when Capt. Johnson's company will continue in its independent form.

There are only ten companies of infantry in Maine, nearly all armed with breech-loaders and equipped according to law, but none of artillery or cavalry. In addition to these there are 16 companies of unorganized militia, which are to be uniformed and equipped at the expense of the State. The regimental organization of 30 officers and 600 enlisted men. The present portion of the infantry force is composed of the First Infantry, Col. MILEY commanding, with headquarters at Biddeford; the Portland Light Infantry, and the Rockland Rifles, under special mention. The formation of the Second Infantry, Col. ——, with headquarters at Bangor, has been completed, and the regiment is to be mustered by the General Court of Massachusetts next C. Inst. The Rifles were organized by the Legislature of 1869-70, and the first year's drill was of 1870-71. The Governor considers the militia duty in the defenses of Portland. Each company did excellent service during the war.

The soldiers' and sailors' Monument in memory of the heroes of Monmouth will be unveiled on the 5th of April, at Freehold. The centre of the monument is a granite shaft 50 feet in height, surmounted by a bronze statue of Liberty 12 feet high. The figures in the surrounding group are of bronze, as are also the figures of Gen. R. R. Taylor, commander of the Tenth Michigan Cavalry, who has been selected by the Grand Marshal of the day to act as chief marshal on that day.

The annual meeting of the Veteran Association of the officers of the Ninth Massachusetts Regiment, Col. Fiske in command, will be held at Worcester, Mass., on the 27th inst. The Regimental Band, Col. Fiske is President, Capt. Sumner Carruth, Secretary, and Lieut. Lewis Sabin, Treasurer. The membership is 200, and the association is in a flourishing condition.

The Veteran Association of the Fifty-fourth Regiment, Massachusetts Volunteers, will hold its annual meeting and dinner at Boston on the 27th inst. The Fifty-fourth was the first colored regiment recruited in the North, and was commanded by Col. Robert Gould Shaw, who was killed in the assault on Fort Wagner, S. C., July 18, 1863. The regiment was mustered out of service in August, 1865.

The Veteran Association of the Fifty-fifth Regiment, Massachusetts Volunteers, will hold its annual meeting and dinner at Boston on the 27th inst. The Fifty-fifth was the second colored regiment recruited in the North, and was commanded by Col. Edward N. Hallowell, who was killed in the assault on Fort Wagner, S. C., July 18, 1863. The regiment was mustered out of service in August, 1865

TERMS TO MAIL SUBSCRIBERS

The New-York Times has opened a branch office in Brooklyn at No. 44 Court-st opposite the City Hall, where advertisements will be received until 8 P.M.

An instructive illustration of the benefits of an elective Judiciary will be found in the Board of Police Department above the result of incompetent political courts and interested political influences, we believe to be a very wise one. The Board is composed of one Judge from each of the four Courts of Record, elected by the Judges themselves, and one Justice of the Peace, also elected by the Judges of the Courts of Special Sessions. Mr. BENJAMIN HASTINGS, the well-known Democratic lawyer, is the Secretary. Under the able and impartial administration of this Board, the Police Department has become a model of efficiency and economy, and the public confidence in it is unbounded. Contrast this with the condition of the Police Department when it was under the control of the Governor, Mayor and Recorder, and the necessity for the change will be apparent to every one.

The amendment designed to elevate the Board of Police will come before the people at the coming election. It is a very important measure, and should receive the support of every one who desires to see the Police Department of this City placed upon a thoroughly non-political basis. Under the present system, the Police Commissioners are appointed by the Governor, and are necessarily subject to political influences. The Governor is elected by the people, and he naturally appoints Commissioners who will be in accord with his political views. The Police Department is thus made a political machine, and its efficiency is destroyed. The Governor has no time to devote to the duties of Police Commissioner, and he is compelled to appoint men who will be subservient to his political interests

A STORM CAME

Twenty-seven minutes past one, on Wednesday morning, by the City Hall clock, whose ang ils toll-tuns from inches exactly of the clang the Gotham, knocked [illegible] and the hour, saw the solitary [illegible] square walking hastily toward the corner of Vesey-street to catch an Eighth-avenue car. At that particular period of the day—I speak astronomically—it leaves at the half hour precisely, and the next one does not "show up" for fifteen minutes. The wind swept along behind me on Park-row [illegible] north-half mile, emphasizing its right to be biting and cold with frequent and vicious gusts, which watched their opportunity to slyly convey the sharpest particles of sleet down the nape of my neck, which increased my forward impetus, and with accelerated speed I came to the end of the new Post-office [illegible] just in time to see the red light vanish past the Astor House corner. My shout of "hold hard" never reached the conductor's ears, which, beside being covered with large rolls of woolen muffler, were with the rest of this public servant inside the car, peering through the glass door into the darkness. Steadiless, and with an [illegible] to peregrinate, which was speedily checked by the persistent assaults of the storm, I leaned against the iron rail which separates the hallowed couches of the departed parishioners of St. Paul's from the thoroughfare of [illegible] worshipers. No thought of either troubled me much, for deep chagrin at the prospect banished all but selfish considerations.

"Misery loves fellowship," and it must be confessed that a certain exhilaration of spirits akin to joy was created by the sound of hurried steps coming up from Fulton-street, and the apparition of a lighted cigar rapidly approaching my corner from Ann-street. My attention was also happily diverted for the moment from personal discomforts by the speculation as to which would be the first disappointed. "Cigar" was making good time, and judging by its glowing brilliancy, its fire was unabated by the exertion.

But the way the other fellow, whom I shall call "Steps," came down was a marvel; two hundred and ten and a half to the minute at least. I was excited and attempted to time them; but the poor gas of the expensive company did not afford light enough to see the face of my watch. The race was short. "Cigar" came in ahead by a length—no, half a length; the other moisty had to be allowed for the wind.

"Cigar" was a loquacious dog, who had been drinking freely of certain magnifying waters, purchasable at corner groceries and other well-known marts, and saw more stars than common people generally do. He was a bit of an astronomical punster, and persisted in asserting "that the Great Bear must be a comet, as he was a heavenly body with a tail; that Venus, ely mimx, always put on her brightest looks when the moon was at its full, because of the man in it, and that the solar system received its nourishment from the milky way, and that none of them would come out such a night as this for fear of taking cold."

"Steps" hooted ineffable scorn at the wretch, "Cigar," who, in happy ignorance of the former's disgust, remarked with a sigh, "How different Diana was from most other people; it took only four quarters and a few horns to make her full."

At this "Steps" could contain himself no longer, and in the choicest mode of expression, slowly observed: "Well, you are about the most infernal idiot I ever did hear. Why don't you joke, while you are about it?"

"So-cr-y!" drawled "Cigar," removing his cigar from his mouth with his left thumb and index finger, and knocking the ash off with a flip; "are you a funny man?" "Steps" was silent.

At this moment four men came around the corner, two by two. One in each couple carried a cane, and walked with that flat-footed tread peculiar to blind persons. They halted and ranged their forms to the railing, and their queer conversation soon absorbed the attention of those who were before them. A blind man in a black overcoat and low-crowned hat, said aloud, as if in continuation of a conversation:

"Van, Fiddle's voice is some fast. The other evening he couldn't reach F sharp, to save his neck."

"You don't say!" interestedly interjected the other, who wore a heavy pilot cape; "what was it, Mac?"

"You see I was playing the piano for Dick one of his nights off, at their free-and-easy, and a lot of talent was in the room. Some friend of Fiddle' called upon him to sing 'Terence's Farewell to Kathleen.' Well, Sir, when he came to that F sharp, you know, (humming the tune,) he couldn't do it. The natural, even, was nearly too much for him."

"Poor fellow," sighed Pilot Cape. "Poor fellow." Then, in a sonambulant tone to the others, "He-gin dandit, Mac! Too much gin! That'll fetch a man's voice quicker than anything except starvation. Gin! Gin! Gin's the master!"

"Well! well! I suppose you're right, Van; but it hurt me to hear him." And, as he spoke he raised his pale, mutinous face toward the glimmering of the corner, and the shadow of a painful recollection flitted across its features. A moment after he turned to his companion, in a more cheery tone, saying, "Have you got that mass in G minor yet, Van?"

"Yes; I bought the music of it the other day; but I haven't had a chance to study it yet. I heard it Adad, and isn't it splendid?"

"Whose is it?"

"I didn't see the name. But I hear that it's one of Mozart's, Mozart's, or some other of them Italian musical chaps. I tell you, Mac, I'd like to be acquainted with one of them. What pianists in a free-and-easy they would make. They could go on playing different things all the night, and needn't care for the longest setters. I'm going to practice that mass this week."

"Whose saying to read it for you?"

"McMaster promised to do so."

"It'll take some time to get the whole of it."

"Not so all, man! I'll engage to play it all over correctly for you by this night two weeks."

"If you like it, you will. But, hark!" The faintest tinkle of a bell is heard away down Vesey-street. Not a light can yet be seen. "There's a Sixth-avenue car!"

"How do you know?" asked I.

"By the sound of the bells on the horses' collars. The Sixth have a sharp click. You hear!" (a moment's pause,) "and the Eighth is the full tone of A."

"This one here is C, Mac," said Van, as the car's green light came into view.

"Ah," quoth the other, "C sharp."

"Twould be dull if you could," muttered the incorrigible "Cigar" to the other side of me. And then disdaining to waste breath on so the weak and even submitted by our lowly driver, who found it difficult to warm his lubberous wrags and straw-bound legs. The animals dragged him lustily on to the wheels-free to the other platform, where they were hitched on again.

"Now, my up," shouted the sleepy conductor. "Sixth-seven-Sixth! Hurry along now! Sixth-seven-Sixth."

"Good night, Van," said Blind Mac; and, after he had had time placed in the hands of his friend and chatman, he was led to the car, guided to a seat, the brake wheeled, and off they went. Just as the rear rail disappeared around Church-street corner two persons leaped quickly across from Ruppert's.

"Halloo! Sailor!" shouted [illegible] "Stop! stop that car!" the other.

But the only response was that of "Cigar!" "Send a telegram to stop him; the spark may catch the car, or it has a conductor in it."

"I'll report this conduct—I mean one of the new-comers—2 feats, of nineteen, with long hair hair, and a spring overcoat open to the waist-button, to-know-his-name-from."

"Won't you first see another first?" mildly put in "Cigar."

"I'm a member of the Press, don't you call to

JUDICIARY INVESTIGATIONS.

A Busy Day for the Committee Yesterday.

The County Clerk's and Register's Offices Investigated—Work of the Subcommittee—Barnard's Defense.

The Judiciary Committee resumed their investigation of the charges against Judge Barnard yesterday at 10 A. M. A large number of witnesses were examined, all of whom, with the exception of Gen. Blair and Judge Sutherland, were called for the defense. The Tax-Association claim that they have not established their witnesses, but owing to the unreasonable absence of several, they allowed Judge Barnard's counsel to call witnesses in rebuttal of testimony.

The first witness called was Gen. Frank Blair, who testified to rebuttal. He certain ex-works said to have been made by Judge Barnard in reference to the Jerseyite at the Union Pacific Restaurant. Mr. Bushnell, one of the Directors, in his testimony given a few days ago, stated that Judge Barnard had said that he had never the set of d—d scoundrels out of New-York—referring to the directors of the Union Pacific. Gen. Blair was present when Barnard made this remark, and gave the following version of the affair:

[illegible] with Judge Barnard and several other persons were discussing the affairs of the Erie Railroad in the bar-room of the Astor House. The conversation turned upon the Union Pacific, when Barnard said he had already served that set of scoundrels out of New-York, and would soon do the same with the other, meaning Erie. The witness did not remember whether Barnard had used the word "damned" or not, but was certain that his language referred to the two railroad companies. He thought that Barnard's remarks were meant as jokes, as his manner was decidedly jocular.

In answer to a question from Mr. Parsons, witness said he thought that Judge Barnard's feeling the Erie Ring out of New-York was a very proper one.

Judge Ingraham testified in relation to the suit of Mrs. Fields against Hon. Tom. Fields. He stated that it was intended he should have the hearing of the case, and the papers were handed to him; he had occasion to leave town and forgot the papers, leaving them in Court, where, in his absence, they were handed over to Judge Barnard, who afterward took charge of the case.

Mr. Wetmore was called for the defense, and examined in relation to the suit of Bowles against Duff, contradictine the testimony of Mr. Compton, who testified a few days ago.

Mr. John E. Develin was examined in relation to the suit of John Scott against the Tammany Sachems. Witness said he was counsel for the plaintiff, and had procured the order of injunction to show cause from Judge Barnard. It did not occur to him that Judge Barnard was a member of the Tammany organization; but that fact he did not think disqualified him from issuing the order. Mr. Develin was also examined in reference to the libel suit of Capt. Sanford against the Evening Post. Mr. Black, on Thursday last, testified that Judge Barnard had purposely delayed granting a motion on this suit, which action was detrimental to the interests of Sanford, and was an act of favoritism towards the proprietors of the Evening Post. Mr. Develin contradicted this testimony by stating that he was counsel for the Evening Post in the said suit, and that he had never desired any delay in the proceedings, but that on the contrary, his clients and he were anxious that the suit should be brought to a close, and that he several times addressed Judge Barnard on the subject of bringing the case to a conclusion.

Mr. Steinhart was examined in reference to the testimony given by Mr. Adolph Sevinger about a suit for restraining foreclosure of mortgage. Mr. Levinger stated that he had applied for an order from Judge Barnard to withdraw the necessary papers, which order the Judge refused, without examining the papers; Mr. Steinhart then took the papers from him and said he knew how to fix it with the Judge, and procured the order, much to the (Levinger's) surprise. Witness explained the proceeding by saying that Weinsen had been employed by him as his counsel, but that he had reason to doubt his capacity, and that when he failed to procure the order he felt convinced that he was no lawyer, but, as witness said, was better fit to "run a gin-mill" than to be a member of the Bar. Witness then went to Mr. J. B. Fellows and employed him as counsel, and Mr. Fellows appeared to Judge Barnard and obtained the injunction.

Mr. Weeks Culver was next called, in reference to the suit of Klemendorf against Savage and others, to contradict the statement of Mr. Boardman, counsel for defendant, who had testified that in the case Judge Barnard had granted an injunction for plaintiffs $1,500 although Culver denied the statement in toto, and said, that on the contrary, Barnard had injustly allowed Boardman $400 and $75 costs.

Mr. J. H. Strahan said he was a counselor-at-law, and was at present the counsel for Mr. Counsellor Green; was called by the defense to controvert the testimony recently given by Ex-Mayor Opdyke. The subject matter of the suit in which Mr. Strahan was asked to testify was the statement of Mr. Havemeyer, that when Judge Barnard granted the injunction which stopped the course of the Tammany thieves, he did so because the pressure of public opinion was as great as he dared not refuse; but that afterward he had fristered away the effect of this injunction by numerous modifications. In rebuttal of this, Mr. Strahan gave a long and circumstantial account of the obtaining of this injunction. He said, that he was counsel for Mr. John Foley, the plaintiff in the suit, and that when the papers were prepared, he, Mr. Foley, and several Reformers called upon Judge Sutherland, who was sitting in Chambers. He (Mr. Strahan) presented the papers and asked the Judge to grant the injunction upon them. The Judge was rather startled at the magnitude of the thing, hesitated and made several excuses, and finally told the gentlemen that he did not like to undertake to grant this injunction, as the term of his office had nearly expired, and he did not care to damage his own interests so materially. The gentlemen then repaired to Harlem, to make application to Judge Ingraham for this injunction, but singularly enough, although that gentleman was aware such application was to be made to him, he found pressing business to take him out of town, and the Reformers returned to the City considerably disgusted. A discussion then took place, and it was agreed that application should be made to Judge Barnard. The witness stated that the papers were presented to the Judge in open Court, and were signed without hesitation.

Mr. Augustus Brown, of the firm of Brown, Hall & Vanderpool, was examined in relation to the suit of Bowles against Duff, but his evidence chested nothing of importance.

Mr. Jay Gould was questioned upon the subject of paying money to Judges Barnard. The witness denied the statement in toto, and had never paid Barnard money directly or indirectly. In cross-examination he said he knew nothing of a certain check for $5,000, which was supposed to have passed between Judge Barnard and himself; somewhere about the time of the division of the birth of Judge Barnard's son, made the child a present, but on no other occasion did he ever give or offer Barnard anything.

Mr. W. A. Brace said he had been counsel for the Erie Railroad, and testified in relation to the granting of certain orders by Judge Barnard in the Heath and Raphael suit.

Mr. J. C. Bushnell, one of the directors of the Union Pacific Railroad, testified in relation to the $10,000 which, on a former occasion, he said, Fisk was paid to Judge Fullerton, for the purpose of getting James Fisk to suspend his suit against the Union Pacific. It will be remembered that Mr. Fullerton, the day Mr. Bushnell's testimony was published, at his own request, was called as a witness, and stated that the $10,000 was handed to Mr. Fisk as loan instead. Mr. Bushnell, in his testimony to-day, stated that he had an interview with Fisk upon the subject, and Fisk positively asserted that he had never received one dollar of the money, knew nothing about it, and withdrew from the suit entirely. Bushnell's statement was corroborated by that of his partner, Mr. John Develin.

The Committee then adjourned until 10 A. M. on Monday, the 25th inst., when a number of witnesses will be called by the Bar Association to inquire into a charge against Barnard which has hitherto remained unfounded.

Mr. Charles Mitchell was examined yesterday at 10 A. M. to hear complainte against the Register's office. Mr. Higginbotham, attorney, who had already given testimony of a nature seriously affecting the Register and his management, was subpœnaed, but did not appear until 2¼ P. M. When the Committee had gone home. He then said he had been unable to be here in time, owing to other business summoning him at the same hour. The Committee, however, refused to hear the testimony, and as the witness represented him for wasting the time of the Committee and putting the State to expense.

Mr. Higginbotham offered no excuse for his conduct, and Mr. Miles, indignant at his behavior, said some rather severe sarcasms toward him; whereupon Higginbotham raised his voice and commenced to talk to Mr. Miles over Mr. Kelly's head. Mr. Miles remained quiet and permitted in his cool, steely manner that if the gentleman broke his sand it would certainly be the last sand he would have the pleasure of breaking. Higginbotham then subsided slightly, and muttered some kind of an apology, which Mr. Miles unreservedly let by saying that he was ready for the examination of witnesses. Mr. Mitchell was then called upon to testify, and stated that he had examined the papers in the office of the County Clerk filed in 1871 and 1872, and have in many cases calculated the legal fees on them; in these cases I have made the fees either the same or a little more than the County Clerk charged; I have made the fees of non-searches I examined, giving the number of the search, the number of days it was left in his office, the legal fees, the sums paid, and the difference between the two last mentioned; the searches selected are a fair representation of the ordinary searches and the moneys paid on them. I find the extra charge fifty per cent, of the legal fees in some cases a little less, and in others a little more; in 1872 the searches, with a single exception, were made twenty-four hours after they left the County Clerk's office; since the 1st of January last, owing to the negotiations by the Tweed-venue having failed, a great many mortgages with a large company the amount of business we had in the County Clerk's office has been very large; the extras paid have been half of the legal fees, as will be seen by the table I present; as all our searches have to be done within ten days—that, I believe, is the limit within which searchers are to be done without extra charge; I cannot speak of my knowledge upon that subject at all; I think the practice of the law that the searches be returned within a specified time hinders the practice of extortion; I think it would tend very much to a clear understanding in relation to the fees, that facility in the examination of an act would be passed diminishing the numbers of fees that are recognized as such, or supposed to be such, in the County Clerk's office; with reference to the same matter of insolvent and general assignment, it seems every purpose is answered when fifty is recorded in the Register's office and it seems to be the proper place for them; I suppose the labor of searching for judgments is far greater than for all other Notices and liens combined; I seldom made personal searches from the records of the County Clerk's office; we always take the official search as correct, and therefore I am not as familiar with the matter as Mr. Clerk's clerks.

Q.—What, in your opinion, would be a sufficient margin as to the time for the County Clerk to complete searches ordinarily in his office? A.—I am not sufficiently well-informed with the clerical force in the office to state.

Mr. Lowe here presented a statement of the various changes of the fee system under which the department was conducted.

Mr. Tilden said that none of those were of recent date, and a careful comparison of the condition of things ten years ago with those of to-day should be made.

Mr. Davies' examination resumed: I think the fee system is very complicated; it is exceedingly well managed, and has been very much improved under Mr. Lowe's supervision; I had occasion a few times to complain of want of attention among his subordinates, and he has always personally rectified the matter; I think the care of the papers is singularly correct, and I never knew a paper to be misplaced; I examined, giving the number of the search, the number of days it was left in his office, the legal fees, the sums paid, and the difference between the two last mentioned; the searches selected are a fair representation of the ordinary searches and the moneys paid on them; I find the extra about fifty per cent.
